Milo's First Library Card

LITTLE READERS

Milo and Dad walk down the street together.
They stop at a big building.

"This is the library," Dad says. "There are many books inside."

Milo looks up at the wide front doors.
"Can we go in?" he asks.

"Yes," says Dad.
"Today you can get your own library card."

Inside, Milo sees shelves of colorful books.
The room is bright and quiet.

A librarian smiles at him.

“Welcome!” she says.

“How can I help?”

"I would like a card," Milo tells her. Dad stands beside him.

"I can help with that,"
the librarian says.
She takes out a form.

Dad reads the form
with Milo. Together, they fill it in.

The librarian checks it
and reaches for a card.
Milo waits at the desk.

"This card is yours," she says. Milo takes it

"What can I do with it?"
he asks. "You can borrow books," she says.

Milo holds his new card.
"Can I choose a book right now?" he asks.

"Of course," Dad says.
He points to a low shelf near a little table.

Milo walks to the shelf.
There are books about dogs, boats, and birds.

One book has a red bus on the cover. Milo pulls it gently from the shelf.

He opens the book
at the little table. Dad sits down beside him.

A boy waits at a bus stop
points to the red bus.

Milo turns to the next one.
The bus goes up a hill.

"I like this story," Milo says. "May I take this book home?"

Milo turns another page.
The red bus goes past a sunny green park.

He points to the bus.
Dad smiles and reads
the next little page.

"I like this story," Milo says. "May I choose another book, too?"

"I like this one, too," Milo says. He smiles at the picture of the dog.

Milo takes the dog book from the shelf. He looks at its happy face.

"I choose this one,"
he says. Dad smiles.
"A good choice!"

Milo carries both books to the librarian's desk.
"May I borrow these?"

"Yes," she says.

Milo gives her the books.

She puts them on the desk.

"May I see your card?"
the librarian asks.
Milo nods.

Milo gives her his card.
She checks out the books for him to take home.

"Bring them back when you finish," she says.
"Then you can choose more."

"Thank you!" says Milo.
The librarian gives his card back to him.

Dad helps Milo put the books in a bag.
Milo holds his card safely.

Milo waves goodbye to the librarian.
"See you soon!" he says.

Outside, the sun shines
on the library steps.
Milo walks beside Dad.

“I have my own card,” Milo says. “And I have two books to read.”

At home, Dad and Milo
read the red bus book.
They turn the pages together.

Next, they read the dog book.

The dog runs through a park.

After the stories,
Milo puts the books
in a safe place.

He puts his library card
there, too. "I cannot wait to choose more books!"

Where do Milo and Dad go together?
What can they find there?

Who helps Milo get his library card?
What does she give him?

What can Milo do
with his new card?
Tell a friend.

What is on the cover of the first book Milo chooses?

What animal is on the cover of the second book?

What does the librarian do with the books and Milo's card?

What must Milo do when he finishes reading the books?

What does Milo do with his books and card at the end?

The End
